

Over the past season, you've noticed an area of particularly increased spring magic activity. It's deep in some thick woods in Axmure, in the grounds of a long-abandoned House. You didn't think much of it, until you heard some yeofolk from the next House over mention that they'd found mangled bodies floating downstream from those woods.

You didn't think much of it, until a briar showed the fresh bark on their arm they said they'd got from hiking through those same woods. They claimed something unseen attacked them while they bathed in a pool in the woods.

Over the past season, you've heard some strange rumours about a little forest in Axmure called the Wasted Wood. It lies in the grounds of a long-abandoned House, and there have been stories of ghosts haunting its lands for years. But now someone is claiming some kind of dire eagle or dire fish – depending on who you listen to – lives by a waterfall deep within the wood.
