

Maxim my dearest,

I hope you are well. There is much displeasure currently in the ranks here, in grand part due to the actions of the Empire last summit. It frustrated them greatly to lose that caravan. I know that you may still think many awful things of me but all I can do is say again that this was necessary, and that what I still do is necessary. Cracks are beginning to show within, as the Vyig begin to be split via territorial differences. The Temeschwarians I am with greatly disprove of a new Sarvos branch, led by an Uncle who has self-titled himself Uncle Sarvos and who operate out of some islands near the docks. Not only that but with the failure of the caravan, both sides are blaming the other of leaking secrets so this conflict, and the suspicion it is sowing, may blow my entire cover ruining any chance I have of helping to remove the Shadowsmith.

The Sarvosians had a run in with some Leaguers in the Winter and won many valuables from the fight so since then have been building their position and power by the city. However, they are still not fully established and a decisive strike could eliminate them completely. This would cause the Temeschwarians to relax and make my mission much easier.

The Uncles here in Temeschwar are planning to contact certain Leaguers to persuade them to make a move against Uncle Sarvos and eliminate him from the game. I do not know who or when though I am sorry, only that it is during next summit. Inquire with the Leaguers that you know, find out when it is and please convince your nation to support this raid.

Shy never from the harder task.

I still hope you can find it in your heart to forgive me but understand that this may never be.

As before, do not try and contact me. My cover could be blown at any moment. Every day I live in fear of being found out

LK
