

Semmerholm Congregation

Your congregation brings you the news that the singing heralds of Lashonar appear to be abroad again – the birdlike humanoids can be found in the corners of taverns and similar gathering places, singing sweet songs of home and being with your loved ones, and sad songs of lives lost to war and fighting. They appear to be emerging from the same regio in the depths of Axmure as they were previously using, and therefore are mostly concentrated in Semmerholm, although they appear to be concentrating on singing with the yeomanry, and rather shy of encountering the nobility; some are making the journey through Astolat (although they seem to be avoiding staying there too long) down to Miaren.

Miaren Congregation

Your congregation brings you the news that the singing heralds of Lashonar appear to be abroad again - the birdlike humanoids can be found in the corners of taverns and similar gathering places, singing sweet songs of walking the peaceful trods of the Empire and being with your loved ones, and sad songs of Stridings and Steadings lost to war and fighting. They appear to be coming across from Dawn; some are making the journey through Miaren and into the Marches.

Upwold Congregation

Your congregation brings you the news that the singing heralds of Lashonar appear to be abroad again - the birdlike humanoids can be found in the corners of taverns and similar gathering places, singing sweet songs of home and being with your loved ones, and sad songs of lives lost to war and fighting. They appear to making the journey through Miaren into Upwold, where their songs concentrate on the simple delights of pastoral contentment far away from the battle lines, and sometimes edge into controversial territory, alleging that a life as a Jotun thrall may not be that different from a Marcher farmhand's usual lot.

Semmerholm SMU

Your unit brings you the news that the singing heralds of Lashonar appear to be abroad again - the birdlike humanoids can be found in the corners of taverns and similar gathering places, singing sweet songs of home and being with your loved ones, and sad songs of lives lost to war and fighting. They appear to be emerging from the same regio in the depths of Axmure as they were previously using, and therefore are mostly concentrated in Semmerholm, although they appear to be concentrating on singing with the yeomanry, and rather shy of encountering the nobility; some are making the journey through Astolat (although they seem to be avoiding staying there too long) down to Miaren.

Miaren SMU

Your unit brings you the news that the singing heralds of Lashonar appear to be abroad again - the birdlike humanoids can be found in the corners of taverns and similar gathering places, singing sweet songs of walking the peaceful trods of the Empire and being with your loved ones, and sad songs of Stridings and Steadings lost to war and fighting. They appear to be coming across from Dawn; some are making the journey through Miaren and into the Marches.

Upwold SMU

Your unit brings you the news that the singing heralds of Lashonar appear to be abroad again - the birdlike humanoids can be found in the corners of taverns and similar gathering places, singing sweet songs of home and being with your loved ones, and sad songs of lives lost to war and fighting. They appear to making the journey through Miaren into Upwold, where their songs concentrate on the simple delights of pastoral contentment far away from the battle lines, and sometimes edge into controversial territory, alleging that a life as a Jotun thrall may not be that different from a Marcher farmhand's usual lot.