

I , Oscuro Kira di Tassato

Agree to sell tickets to The Sovereign Lord of the City of Chains Game of Risk - The Argent Gateau. This will take place at the Autumn Equinox, at a time to be revealed at the Equinox, in a Chamber accessed through the Hall of Worlds.

I have taken 4 tickets to sell. I may choose the price of the ticket and am not obliged to divulge to The Argent Prince exactly what value I realised for them.

Instead I will consider what share of my profits I give to him. He will judge and provide a boon of Autumn magic that he considers of appropriate value to those profits.

I must keep an accurate record of who I have sold the tickets to, with correct spelling and transmit it to the Argent Prince using a page from his ledger before the end of the Solstice. It should also include , a declaration of the amount of profit I intend to pass to him at the Autumn Equinox.

I may trade the tickets for goods or services, but if I trade for services they must be received by me, and the value turned into goods or coin for distribution to The Argent Prince – he is not interested in receiving services in this deal.

I may not trade for favours or other forms of future promise. This is not a deal with the Spider.

I must be up front about the fact that the Argent Gateau is a game of risk – although there are some great boons to be won, there are also negative consequences.

If the share of profits I offer to Callidus equals less than twice the amount of either of my competitor ticket sellers, then The Argent Prince will no longer be expected to provide a boon but will instead simply take the profits offered for himself.

I should notify people buyers that their ticket entitles them to one free slice of the cake. If I decide to offer them more than that then I will be buying any additional slices of the cake offered out of my own pocket. Slices cost 1 crown and are always cut from an open edge.

I must not discuss my sales tactics with the other ticket sellers in the Empire. If The Sovereign Lord hears of any price fixing between us all terms of this deal are negated – although the tickets themselves will still be valid and the Argent Gateau will continue.

I may keep a ticket for myself if I wish to take part in the Argent Gateau. If I prefer to sell all tickets I will be invited to the Game of Risk purely as an observer.

There will be at least 3 rings of ilium to be won from the Argent Gateau. There will be a cursed debt of at least 10 Thrones in the Argent Gateau. There will be several prizes of neutral value and several of unusual flavour, affecting confidence, risk taking and ambition.

Signed on behalf of Lanister, Secretary of Callidus

Signed by the Contract Holder

I Laffiette De Maniesperte Morosini Von Temeschwar

Agree to sell tickets to The Sovereign Lord of the City of Chains Game of Risk - The Argent Gateau. This will take place at the Autumn Equinox, at a time to be revealed at the Equinox, in a Chamber accessed through the Hall of Worlds.

I have taken 4 tickets to sell. I may choose the price of the ticket and am not obliged to divulge to The Argent Prince exactly what value I realised for them.

Instead I will consider what share of my profits I give to him. He will judge whether they are interesting enough to forgive the 10 throne debt I owe from the last Equinox.

I must keep an accurate record of who I have sold the tickets to, with correct spelling and transmit it to the Argent Prince, along with a declaration of the amount I intend to pass to him at the Autumn Equinox.

I may trade the tickets for goods or services, but if I trade for services they must be received by me, and the value turned into goods or coin for distribution to The Argent Prince – he is not interested in receiving services in this deal.

I may not trade for favours or other forms of future promise. This is not a deal with the Spider.

I must be up front about the fact that the Argent Gateau is a game of risk – although there are some great boons to be won, there are also negative consequences.

If the share of profits I offer to Callidus equals less than twice the amount of either of my competitor ticket sellers, then The Argent

Prince will instead expect me to repay the 10 thrones and will add a second curse to the Scriveners Mark of the original contract from the game.

I should notify people buyers that their ticket entitles them to one free slice of the cake. If I decide to offer them more than that then I will be buying any additional slices of the cake offered out of my own pocket. Slices cost 1 crown and are always cut from an open edge.

I must not discuss my sales tactics with the other ticket sellers in the Empire. If The Sovereign Lord hears of any price fixing between us all terms of this deal are negated – although the tickets themselves will still be valid and the Argent Gateau will continue.

I may keep a ticket for myself if I wish to take part in the Argent Gateau. If I prefer to sell all tickets I will be invited to the Game of Risk purely as an observer.

There will be at least 3 rings of ilium to be won from the Argent Gateau. There will be a cursed debt of at least 10 Thrones in the Argent Gateau. There will be several prizes of neutral value and several of unusual flavour, affecting confidence, risk taking and ambition.

Signed on behalf of Lanister, Secretary of Callidus

Signed by the Contract Holder

I

Agree to sell tickets to The Sovereign Lord of the City of Chains Game of Risk - The Argent Gateau. This will take place at the Autumn Equinox, at a time to be revealed at the Equinox, in a Chamber accessed through the Hall of Worlds.

I have taken 4 tickets to sell. I may choose the price of the ticket and am not obliged to divulge to The Argent Prince exactly what value I realised for them.

Instead I will consider what share of my profits I give to him. He will judge and provide a boon that he considers of appropriate value to those profits.

I must keep an accurate record of who I have sold the tickets to, with correct spelling and transmit it to the Argent Prince using a page from his ledger before the end of the Solstice. It should also include , a declaration of the amount of profit I intend to pass to him at the Autumn Equinox.

I may trade the tickets for goods or services, but if I trade for services they must be received by me, and the value turned into goods or coin for distribution to The Argent Prince – he is not interested in receiving services in this deal.

I may not trade for favours or other forms of future promise. This is not a deal with the Spider.

I must be up front about the fact that the Argent Gateau is a game of risk – although there are some great boons to be won, there are also negative consequences.

If the share of profits I offer to Callidus equals less than twice the amount of the other ticket sellers, then The Argent Prince will no longer be expected to provide a boon but will instead simply take the profits offered for himself.

I should notify people buyers that their ticket entitles them to one free slice of the cake. If I decide to offer them more than that then I will be buying any additional slices of the cake offered out of my own pocket. Slices cost 1 crown and are always cut from an open edge.

I must not discuss my sales tactics with the other ticket sellers in the Empire. If The Sovereign Lord hears of any price fixing between us all terms of this deal are negated – although the tickets themselves will still be valid and the Argent Gateau will continue.

I may keep a ticket for myself if I wish to take part in the Argent Gateau. If I prefer to sell all tickets I will be invited to the Game of Risk purely as an observer.

There will be at least 3 rings of ilium to be won from the Argent Gateau. There will be a cursed debt of at least 10 Thrones in the Argent Gateau. There will be several prizes of neutral value and several of unusual flavour, affecting confidence, risk taking and ambition.

Signed on behalf of Lanister, Secretary of Callidus

Signed by the Contract Holder

