

Vana

I have perused the judgments of the Autumn Equinox and see that the value in recording acts of Virtue was understood by the Orc Assembly. Thus I must meet you this Solstice and deliver the secrets that you have in your Ambition won.

I would ask – a casual favour, no more – if you would introduce me to Bloodcrow Losak, some time in the early afternoon of the first full day of the Solstice. I will come to the Orc camp between midday and two in the afternoon – not, of course that I expect you to be there and waiting for me – but that I hope you would leave word where best I can find you and the Priest.

I suggest that you also decide where next your Ambition will take you. The Golden Spider will smooth the path for those who show most drive. I know that there are many who fear trickery, but that is not our way in the City of Bridges. Favours yes, can lead one down unexpected paths, but the rewards for those who aim high and trade with us are worth it.

If you wish to know more about The Lord of the Loom's priorities this Solstice, then you might seek out my friend, League Bishop, Raphaela von Holberg. She will visit Anvil on the Friday of the Solstice and seek a Guild to host her. I will ask her to leave a notice in the Anvil Hub with the location and times once she knows where she will be.

May you be rich in favours and friends

Zola