

Solas

I will be brief, as I rarely am in conversation. I am Varinius of Eudokia's Spire

I follow the Challenge of Wisdom. I follow it knowing that the most important thing is to never cease questioning until you find your Telos, or what the Navarr might call your place in the Dance. And even then, to push further, should that truth change for you.

I come to Anvil seeking others to join me in an opportunity to search for answers in dreams.

I have sought out the names of Questors who understand that the way of Eudokia is the way to the heart of who we are, and of Guides who are dedicated to wisdom. I hope you will meet with me, and decide if you wish to join my pursuit ever deeper into what matters most. The opportunity I have is limited - do not discuss this with too many others, please, or if you do, choose from among those new to Anvil, who are ready to learn that asking, seeking and questioning one's own truth is the best path.

My intention is to visit The Shade tea shop, in Urizen, as close to the beginning of the summit as I can manage. I hope you can join me there, not long after. If it is too far for any of you Navarr I've written to, I will come after that, to the centre of the Woods. It's hard to predict the timing exactly -perhaps around seven or half past seven in the evening.

In Wisdom and In Searching
Varinius

---

Accessibility Note: tear off to have an IC document

Some players who take part in these meetings will be invited to a late evening encounter (11.30pm). We recognise that this could cause accessibility issues, for example for people with fatigue. Unfortunately this is the only time the set for the encounter is available.

If you progress through the early evening discussions and IC want to continue, but OOC cannot, then tell the NPC you will not be available later, and they'll put your name on a list to contact. If this happens, we'll aim to offer you an earlier evening opportunity on similar lines at E4-2024 or E1-2025.

Silk Farkas

I will be brief, as I rarely am in conversation. I am Varinius of Eudokia's Spire

I follow the Challenge of Wisdom. I follow it knowing that the most important thing is to never cease questioning until you find your Telos, or what the Navarr might call your place in the Dance. And even then, to push further, should that truth change for you.

I come to Anvil seeking others to join me in an opportunity to search for answers in dreams.

I have sought out the names of Questors who understand that the way of Eudokia is the way to the heart of who we are, and of Guides who are dedicated to wisdom. I hope you will meet with me, and decide if you wish to join my pursuit ever deeper into what matters most. The opportunity I have is limited - do not discuss this with too many others, please, or if you do, choose from among those new to Anvil, who are ready to learn that asking, seeking and questioning one's own truth is the best path.

My intention is to visit The Shade tea shop, in Urizen, as close to the beginning of the summit as I can manage. I hope you can join me there, not long after. If it is too far for any of you Navarri I've written to, I will come after that, to the centre of the Woods. It's hard to predict the timing exactly -perhaps around seven or half past seven in the evening.

In Wisdom and In Searching
Varinius

---

Accessibility Note: tear off to have an IC document

Some players who take part in these meetings will be invited to a late evening encounter (11.30pm). We recognise that this could cause accessibility issues, for example for people with fatigue. Unfortunately this is the only time the set for the encounter is available.

If you progress through the early evening discussions and IC want to continue, but OOC cannot, then tell the NPC you will not be available later, and they'll put your name on a list to contact. If this happens, we'll aim to offer you an earlier evening opportunity on similar lines at E4-2024 or E1-2025.

Saamy Splitroot

I will be brief, as I rarely am in conversation. I am Varinius of Eudokia's Spire

I follow the Challenge of Wisdom. I follow it knowing that the most important thing is to never cease questioning until you find your Telos, or what the Navarr might call your place in the Dance. And even then, to push further, should that truth change for you.

I come to Anvil seeking others to join me in an opportunity to search for answers in dreams.

I have sought out the names of Questors who understand that the way of Eudokia is the way to the heart of who we are, and of Guides who are dedicated to wisdom. I hope you will meet with me, and decide if you wish to join my pursuit ever deeper into what matters most. The opportunity I have is limited - do not discuss this with too many others, please, or if you do, choose from among those new to Anvil, who are ready to learn that asking, seeking and questioning one's own truth is the best path.

My intention is to visit The Shade tea shop, in Urizen, as close to the beginning of the summit as I can manage. I hope you can join me there, not long after. If it is too far for any of you Navarri I've written to, I will come after that, to the centre of the Woods. It's hard to predict the timing exactly -perhaps around seven or half past seven in the evening.

In Wisdom and In Searching
Varinius

---

Accessibility Note: tear off to have an IC document

Some players who take part in these meetings will be invited to a late evening encounter (11.30pm). We recognise that this could cause accessibility issues, for example for people with fatigue. Unfortunately this is the only time the set for the encounter is available.

If you progress through the early evening discussions and IC want to continue, but OOC cannot, then tell the NPC you will not be available later, and they'll put your name on a list to contact. If this happens, we'll aim to offer you an earlier evening opportunity on similar lines at E4-2024 or E1-2025.

Henarian

I will be brief, as I rarely am in conversation. I am Varinius of Eudokia's Spire

I follow the Challenge of Wisdom. I follow it knowing that the most important thing is to never cease questioning until you find your Telos, or what the Navarr might call your place in the Dance. And even then, to push further, should that truth change for you.

I come to Anvil seeking others to join me in an opportunity to search for answers in dreams.

I have sought out the names of Questors who understand that the way of Eudokia is the way to the heart of who we are, and of Guides who are dedicated to Wisdom. I hope you will meet with me, and decide if you wish to join my pursuit ever deeper into what matters most. The opportunity I have is limited - do not discuss this with too many others, please, or if you do, choose from among those new to Anvil, who are ready to learn that asking, seeking and questioning one's own truth is the best path.

My intention is to visit The Shade tea shop, in Urizen, as close to the beginning of the summit as I can manage. I hope you can join me there, not long after. If it is too far for any of you Navarri I've written to, I will come after that, to the centre of the Woods. It's hard to predict the timing exactly -perhaps around seven or half past seven in the evening.

In Wisdom and In Searching
Varinius

---

Accessibility Note: tear off to have an IC document

Some players who take part in these meetings will be invited to a late evening encounter (11.30pm). We recognise that this could cause accessibility issues, for example for people with fatigue. Unfortunately this is the only time the set for the encounter is available.

If you progress through the early evening discussions and IC want to continue, but OOC cannot, then tell the NPC you will not be available later, and they'll put your name on a list to contact. If this happens, we'll aim to offer you an earlier evening opportunity on similar lines at E4-2024 or E1-2025.

Marcus Larksong

I will be brief, as I rarely am in conversation. I am Varinius of Eudokia's Spire

I follow the Challenge of Wisdom. I follow it knowing that the most important thing is to never cease questioning until you find your Telos, or what the Navarr might call your place in the Dance. And even then, to push further, should that truth change for you.

I come to Anvil seeking others to join me in an opportunity to search for answers in dreams.

I have sought out the names of Questors who understand that the way of Eudokia is the way to the heart of who we are, and of Guides who are dedicated to wisdom. I hope you will meet with me, and decide if you wish to join my pursuit ever deeper into what matters most. The opportunity I have is limited - do not discuss this with too many others, please, or if you do, choose from among those new to Anvil, who are ready to learn that asking, seeking and questioning one's own truth is the best path.

My intention is to visit The Shade tea shop, in Urizen, as close to the beginning of the summit as I can manage. I hope you can join me there, not long after. If it is too far for any of you Navarri I've written to, I will come after that, to the centre of the Woods. It's hard to predict the timing exactly -perhaps around seven or half past seven in the evening.

In Wisdom and In Searching
Varinius

---

Accessibility Note: tear off to have an IC document

Some players who take part in these meetings will be invited to a late evening encounter (11.30pm). We recognise that this could cause accessibility issues, for example for people with fatigue. Unfortunately this is the only time the set for the encounter is available.

If you progress through the early evening discussions and IC want to continue, but OOC cannot, then tell the NPC you will not be available later, and they'll put your name on a list to contact. If this happens, we'll aim to offer you an earlier evening opportunity on similar lines at E4-2024 or E1-2025.

Winifred Blackhawk

I will be brief, as I rarely am in conversation. I am Varinius of Eudokia's Spire

I follow the Challenge of Wisdom. I follow it knowing that the most important thing is to never cease questioning until you find your Telos, or what the Navarr might call your place in the Dance. And even then, to push further, should that truth change for you.

I come to Anvil seeking others to join me in an opportunity to search for answers in dreams.

I have sought out the names of Questors who understand that the way of Eudokia is the way to the heart of who we are, and of Guides who are dedicated to wisdom. I hope you will meet with me, and decide if you wish to join my pursuit ever deeper into what matters most. The opportunity I have is limited - do not discuss this with too many others, please, or if you do, choose from among those new to Anvil, who are ready to learn that asking, seeking and questioning one's own truth is the best path.

My intention is to visit The Shade tea shop, in Urizen, as close to the beginning of the summit as I can manage. I hope you can join me there, not long after. If it is too far for any of you Navarri I've written to, I will come after that, to the centre of the Woods. It's hard to predict the timing exactly -perhaps around seven or half past seven in the evening.

In Wisdom and In Searching
Varinius

---

Accessibility Note: tear off to have an IC document

Some players who take part in these meetings will be invited to a late evening encounter (11.30pm). We recognise that this could cause accessibility issues, for example for people with fatigue. Unfortunately this is the only time the set for the encounter is available.

If you progress through the early evening discussions and IC want to continue, but OOC cannot, then tell the NPC you will not be available later, and they'll put your name on a list to contact. If this happens, we'll aim to offer you an earlier evening opportunity on similar lines at E4-2024 or E1-2025.

Aster

I will be brief, as I rarely am in conversation. I am Varinius of Eudokia's Spire

I follow the Challenge of Wisdom. I follow it knowing that the most important thing is to never cease questioning until you find your Telos, or what the Navarr might call your place in the Dance. And even then, to push further, should that truth change for you.

I come to Anvil seeking others to join me in an opportunity to search for answers in dreams.

I have sought out the names of Questors who understand that the way of Eudokia is the way to the heart of who we are, and of Guides who are dedicated to wisdom. I hope you will meet with me, and decide if you wish to join my pursuit ever deeper into what matters most. The opportunity I have is limited - do not discuss this with too many others, please, or if you do, choose from among those new to Anvil, who are ready to learn that asking, seeking and questioning one's own truth is the best path.

My intention is to visit The Shade tea shop, in Urizen, as close to the beginning of the summit as I can manage. I hope you can join me there, not long after. If it is too far for any of you Navarri I've written to, I will come after that, to the centre of the Woods. It's hard to predict the timing exactly -perhaps around seven or half past seven in the evening.

In Wisdom and In Searching
Varinius

---

Accessibility Note: tear off to have an IC document

Some players who take part in these meetings will be invited to a late evening encounter (11.30pm). We recognise that this could cause accessibility issues, for example for people with fatigue. Unfortunately this is the only time the set for the encounter is available.

If you progress through the early evening discussions and IC want to continue, but OOC cannot, then tell the NPC you will not be available later, and they'll put your name on a list to contact. If this happens, we'll aim to offer you an earlier evening opportunity on similar lines at E4-2024 or E1-2025.

Halkyon of Sojourn's Heart

I will be brief, as I rarely am in conversation. I am Varinius of Eudokia's Spire

I follow the Challenge of Wisdom. I follow it knowing that the most important thing is to never cease questioning until you find your Telos, or what the Navarr might call your place in the Dance. And even then, to push further, should that truth change for you.

I come to Anvil seeking others to join me in an opportunity to search for answers in dreams.

I have sought out the names of Questors who understand that the way of Eudokia is the way to the heart of who we are, and of Guides who are dedicated to wisdom. I hope you will meet with me, and decide if you wish to join my pursuit ever deeper into what matters most. The opportunity I have is limited - do not discuss this with too many others, please, or if you do, choose from among those new to Anvil, who are ready to learn that asking, seeking and questioning one's own truth is the best path.

My intention is to visit The Shade tea shop, in Urizen, as close to the beginning of the summit as I can manage. I hope you can join me there, not long after. If it is too far for any of you Navarri I've written to, I will come after that, to the centre of the Woods. It's hard to predict the timing exactly -perhaps around seven or half past seven in the evening.

In Wisdom and In Searching
Varinius

---

Accessibility Note: tear off to have an IC document

Some players who take part in these meetings will be invited to a late evening encounter (11.30pm). We recognise that this could cause accessibility issues, for example for people with fatigue. Unfortunately this is the only time the set for the encounter is available.

If you progress through the early evening discussions and IC want to continue, but OOC cannot, then tell the NPC you will not be available later, and they'll put your name on a list to contact. If this happens, we'll aim to offer you an earlier evening opportunity on similar lines at E4-2024 or E1-2025.

Jaikwyn Stockheard

I will be brief, as I rarely am in conversation. I am Varinius of Eudokia's Spire

I follow the Challenge of Wisdom. I follow it knowing that the most important thing is to never cease questioning until you find your Telos, or what the Navarr might call your place in the Dance. And even then, to push further, should that truth change for you.

I come to Anvil seeking others to join me in an opportunity to search for answers in dreams.

I have sought out the names of Questors who understand that the way of Eudokia is the way to the heart of who we are, and of Guides who are dedicated to Wisdom. I hope you will meet with me, and decide if you wish to join my pursuit ever deeper into what matters most. The opportunity I have is limited - do not discuss this with too many others, please, or if you do, choose from among those new to Anvil, who are ready to learn that asking, seeking and questioning one's own truth is the best path.

My intention is to visit The Shade tea shop, in Urizen, as close to the beginning of the summit as I can manage. I hope you can join me there, not long after. If it is too far for any of you Navarri I've written to, I will come after that, to the centre of the Woods. It's hard to predict the timing exactly -perhaps around seven or half past seven in the evening.

In Wisdom and In Searching
Varinius

---

Accessibility Note: tear off to have an IC document

Some players who take part in these meetings will be invited to a late evening encounter (11.30pm). We recognise that this could cause accessibility issues, for example for people with fatigue. Unfortunately this is the only time the set for the encounter is available.

If you progress through the early evening discussions and IC want to continue, but OOC cannot, then tell the NPC you will not be available later, and they'll put your name on a list to contact. If this happens, we'll aim to offer you an earlier evening opportunity on similar lines at E4-2024 or E1-2025.

For the attention of the Overseer of the Westward Road

The Kuldsdottir of Kalpaheim invite you to

A pleasant time of gaming and conviviality with an eye to future opportunities

*On the Friday evening of the solstice at around 10pm
In Anvil*

We suggest we meet at the hub, and visit an establishment the Northern Trade Network recommends. The Kuldsdottir of Kalpaheim, will pick up the tab for the titleholders of the Northern Trade Network, or their representatives, and one guest each.

Once, this invitation would have been enough - but time has moved on and I should explain who we are. I am Nils Jokela, and once upon a time, my Hall and its business, Kuldsdottir's of Kalpaheim would have been well known to all across the Empire.

Like many in Wintermark, those close to us were lost alongside Britta. Unlike many of you, we let ourselves become marred up in our grief for too long. It is time and past time for us to return. We were wealthy then, often times holding titles like yours, and trading luxury goods, as well as all the most important resources. Whilst we have let our connections fade, and our production houses falter - we have yet some wealth to our name.

And as I once lived the Path of Prosperity, I return to Anvil to celebrate who we once were, enter Imperial society and build Prosperity with new friends.

Nils

For the attention of the Kalpaheim Tradeholder

The Kuldsdottir of Kalpaheim invite you to

A pleasant time of gaming and conviviality with an eye to future opportunities

*On the Friday evening of the solstice at around 10pm
In Anvil*

We suggest we meet at the hub, and visit an establishment the Northern Trade Network recommends. The Kuldsdottir of Kalpaheim, will pick up the tab for the titleholders of the Northern Trade Network, or their representatives, and one guest each.

Once, this invitation would have been enough - but time has moved on and I should explain who we are. I am Nils Jokela, and once upon a time, my Hall and its business, Kuldsdottir's of Kalpaheim would have been well known to all across the Empire.

Like many in Wintermark, those close to us were lost alongside Britta. Unlike many of you, we let ourselves become marred up in our grief for too long. It is time and past time for us to return. We were wealthy then, often times holding titles like yours, and trading luxury goods, as well as all the most important resources. Whilst we have let our connections fade, and our production houses falter - we have yet some wealth to our name.

And as I once lived the Path of Prosperity, I return to Anvil to celebrate who we once were, enter Imperial society and build Prosperity with new friends.

Nils

For the attention of the Broker of the Treji Wayhouse

The Kuldsdottir of Kalpaheim invite you to

A pleasant time of gaming and conviviality with an eye to future opportunities

*On the Friday evening of the solstice at around 10pm
In Anvil*

We suggest we meet at the hub, and visit an establishment the Northern Trade Network recommends. The Kuldsdottir of Kalpaheim, will pick up the tab for the titleholders of the Northern Trade Network, or their representatives, and one guest each.

Once, this invitation would have been enough - but time has moved on and I should explain who we are. I am Nils Jokela, and once upon a time, my Hall and its business, Kuldsdottir's of Kalpaheim would have been well known to all across the Empire.

Like many in Wintermark, those close to us were lost alongside Britta. Unlike many of you, we let ourselves become marred up in our grief for too long. It is time and past time for us to return. We were wealthy then, often times holding titles like yours, and trading luxury goods, as well as all the most important resources. Whilst we have let our connections fade, and our production houses falter - we have yet some wealth to our name.

And as I once lived the Path of Prosperity, I return to Anvil to celebrate who we once were, enter Imperial society and build Prosperity with new friends.

Nils

For the attention of the Northbound Trademaster

The Kuldsdottir of Kalpaheim invite you to

A pleasant time of gaming and conviviality with an eye to future opportunities

*On the Friday evening of the solstice at around 10pm
In Anvil*

We suggest we meet at the hub, and visit an establishment the Northern Trade Network recommends. The Kuldsdottir of Kalpaheim, will pick up the tab for the titleholders of the Northern Trade Network, or their representatives, and one guest each.

Once, this invitation would have been enough - but time has moved on and I should explain who we are. I am Nils Jokela, and once upon a time, my Hall and its business, Kuldsdottir's of Kalpaheim would have been well known to all across the Empire.

Like many in Wintermark, those close to us were lost alongside Britta. Unlike many of you, we let ourselves become marred up in our grief for too long. It is time and past time for us to return. We were wealthy then, often times holding titles like yours, and trading luxury goods, as well as all the most important resources. Whilst we have let our connections fade, and our production houses falter - we have yet some wealth to our name.

And as I once lived the Path of Prosperity, I return to Anvil to celebrate who we once were, enter Imperial society and build Prosperity with new friends.

Nils

For the attention of the Torfast Trading Post

The Kuldsdottir of Kalpaheim invite you to

A pleasant time of gaming and conviviality with an eye to future opportunities

*On the Friday evening of the solstice at around 10pm
In Anvil*

We suggest we meet at the hub, and visit an establishment the Northern Trade Network recommends. The Kuldsdottir of Kalpaheim, will pick up the tab for the titleholders of the Northern Trade Network, or their representatives, and one guest each.

Once, this invitation would have been enough - but time has moved on and I should explain who we are. I am Nils Jokela, and once upon a time, my Hall and its business, Kuldsdottir's of Kalpaheim would have been well known to all across the Empire.

Like many in Wintermark, those close to us were lost alongside Britta. Unlike many of you, we let ourselves become marred up in our grief for too long. It is time and past time for us to return. We were wealthy then, often times holding titles like yours, and trading luxury goods, as well as all the most important resources. Whilst we have let our connections fade, and our production houses falter - we have yet some wealth to our name.

And as I once lived the Path of Prosperity, I return to Anvil to celebrate who we once were, enter Imperial society and build Prosperity with new friends.

Nils

To the Talon of Kauppahall

My name is Gethyn Blood-and-Sweat.

I'm one of the founders of the Rising Tide sodality. You might have heard of us, we've done some bloody good work in Morrow recently, getting some more Weirwood onto the market into the bargain.

If you've not heard of us, we're an economic group dedicated to spreading Prosperity around. We've nothing against a few people getting rich, but we reckon that Virtue and the economy are best served when everyone's getting a piece of the pie. Hence the name. The Rising Tide lifts all boats, right? We thought it was clever.

Anyway. Point us at a place where you reckon there's untapped Prosperity potential and we'll have a look-see and come up with some ideas that might help out – in our small way. Nothing's for free, any ideas we have are going to take some investment. You can look at the way things are going around the Canterspire Circle to see how effective we are.

One thing is, don't point us at anywhere that work's already been done. You've had the actual Civil Service folk visit Sermersuaq lately, and we won't find anything they didn't. Oh, and we like it if things are focused, we're working in a bit of smaller way than the officials. Maybe there's a specific region you want to look into. Or something folk are already doing for free that you reckon could generate some wealth with a bit of support.

If you're not sure about what sort of thing, talk to Heilyn Bronwen's Rest, the Basilisk of the Bourse. He knows me, and he knows what kind of thing we like to do. I'm going to come up to Anvil this summit. I'll probably be there on Saturday, likely around 5 in the afternoon. I hear Lumi's is a good place to grab a drink, so I'll be there at least to start with. We can grab a drink, pitch some ideas, chat economic theory even. Bring friends!

Yours in Virtue,

Gethyn Blood-and-Sweat

To the Keeper of the Runegrott

My name is Gethyn Blood-and-Sweat.

I'm one of the founders of the Rising Tide sodality. You might have heard of us, we've done some bloody good work in Morrow recently, getting some more Weirwood onto the market into the bargain.

If you've not heard of us, we're an economic group dedicated to spreading Prosperity around. We've nothing against a few people getting rich, but we reckon that Virtue and the economy are best served when everyone's getting a piece of the pie. Hence the name. The Rising Tide lifts all boats, right? We thought it was clever.

Anyway. Point us at a place where you reckon there's untapped Prosperity potential and we'll have a look-see and come up with some ideas that might help out – in our small way. Nothing's for free, any ideas we have are going to take some investment. You can look at the way things are going around the Canterspire Circle to see how effective we are.

One thing is, don't point us at anywhere that work's already been done. You've had the actual Civil Service folk visit Sermersuaq lately, and we won't find anything they didn't. Oh, and we like it if things are focused, we're working in a bit of smaller way than the officials. Maybe there's a specific region you want to look into. Or something folk are already doing for free that you reckon could generate some wealth with a bit of support.

If you're not sure about what sort of thing, talk to Heilyn Bronwen's Rest, the Basilisk of the Bourse. He knows me, and he knows what kind of thing we like to do. I'm going to come up to Anvil this summit. I'll probably be there on Saturday, likely around 5 in the afternoon. I hear Lumi's is a good place to grab a drink, so I'll be there at least to start with. We can grab a drink, pitch some ideas, chat economic theory even. Bring friends!

Yours in Virtue,

Gethyn Blood-and-Sweat

To the Kalpaheim Tradeholder

My name is Gethyn Blood-and-Sweat.

I'm one of the founders of the Rising Tide sodality. You might have heard of us, we've done some bloody good work in Morrow recently, getting some more Weirwood onto the market into the bargain.

If you've not heard of us, we're an economic group dedicated to spreading Prosperity around. We've nothing against a few people getting rich, but we reckon that Virtue and the economy are best served when everyone's getting a piece of the pie. Hence the name. The Rising Tide lifts all boats, right? We thought it was clever.

Anyway. Point us at a place where you reckon there's untapped Prosperity potential and we'll have a look-see and come up with some ideas that might help out – in our small way. Nothing's for free, any ideas we have are going to take some investment. You can look at the way things are going around the Canterspire Circle to see how effective we are.

One thing is, don't point us at anywhere that work's already been done. You've had the actual Civil Service folk visit Sermersuaq lately, and we won't find anything they didn't. Oh, and we like it if things are focused, we're working in a bit of smaller way than the officials. Maybe there's a specific region you want to look into. Or something folk are already doing for free that you reckon could generate some wealth with a bit of support.

If you're not sure about what sort of thing, talk to Heilyn Bronwen's Rest, the Basilisk of the Bourse. He knows me, and he knows what kind of thing we like to do. I'm going to come up to Anvil this summit. I'll probably be there on Saturday, likely around 5 in the afternoon. I hear Lumi's is a good place to grab a drink, so I'll be there at least to start with. We can grab a drink, pitch some ideas, chat economic theory even. Bring friends!

Yours in Virtue,

Gethyn Blood-and-Sweat

To the Mediator of Fisk

My name is Gethyn Blood-and-Sweat.

I'm one of the founders of the Rising Tide sodality. You might have heard of us, we've done some bloody good work in Morrow recently, getting some more Weirwood onto the market into the bargain.

If you've not heard of us, we're an economic group dedicated to spreading Prosperity around. We've nothing against a few people getting rich, but we reckon that Virtue and the economy are best served when everyone's getting a piece of the pie. Hence the name. The Rising Tide lifts all boats, right? We thought it was clever.

Anyway. Point us at a place where you reckon there's untapped Prosperity potential and we'll have a look-see and come up with some ideas that might help out – in our small way. Nothing's for free, any ideas we have are going to take some investment. You can look at the way things are going around the Canterspire Circle to see how effective we are.

One thing is, don't point us at anywhere that work's already been done. You've had the actual Civil Service folk visit Sermersuaq lately, and we won't find anything they didn't. Oh, and we like it if things are focused, we're working in a bit of smaller way than the officials. Maybe there's a specific region you want to look into. Or something folk are already doing for free that you reckon could generate some wealth with a bit of support.

If you're not sure about what sort of thing, talk to Heilyn Bronwen's Rest, the Basilisk of the Bourse. He knows me, and he knows what kind of thing we like to do. I'm going to come up to Anvil this summit. I'll probably be there on Saturday, likely around 5 in the afternoon. I hear Lumi's is a good place to grab a drink, so I'll be there at least to start with. We can grab a drink, pitch some ideas, chat economic theory even. Bring friends!

Yours in Virtue,

Gethyn Blood-and-Sweat

To the Pride of Ikka's Tears

My name is Gethyn Blood-and-Sweat.

I'm one of the founders of the Rising Tide sodality. You might have heard of us, we've done some bloody good work in Morrow recently, getting some more Weirwood onto the market into the bargain.

If you've not heard of us, we're an economic group dedicated to spreading Prosperity around. We've nothing against a few people getting rich, but we reckon that Virtue and the economy are best served when everyone's getting a piece of the pie. Hence the name. The Rising Tide lifts all boats, right? We thought it was clever.

Anyway. Point us at a place where you reckon there's untapped Prosperity potential and we'll have a look-see and come up with some ideas that might help out – in our small way. Nothing's for free, any ideas we have are going to take some investment. You can look at the way things are going around the Canterspire Circle to see how effective we are.

One thing is, don't point us at anywhere that work's already been done. You've had the actual Civil Service folk visit Sermersuaq lately, and we won't find anything they didn't. Oh, and we like it if things are focused, we're working in a bit of smaller way than the officials. Maybe there's a specific region you want to look into. Or something folk are already doing for free that you reckon could generate some wealth with a bit of support.

If you're not sure about what sort of thing, talk to Heilyn Bronwen's Rest, the Basilisk of the Bourse. He knows me, and he knows what kind of thing we like to do. I'm going to come up to Anvil this summit. I'll probably be there on Saturday, likely around 5 in the afternoon. I hear Lumi's is a good place to grab a drink, so I'll be there at least to start with. We can grab a drink, pitch some ideas, chat economic theory even. Bring friends!

Yours in Virtue,

Gethyn Blood-and-Sweat

To the Mediator of Wreck

My name is Gethyn Blood-and-Sweat.

I'm one of the founders of the Rising Tide sodality. You might have heard of us, we've done some bloody good work in Morrow recently, getting some more Weirwood onto the market into the bargain.

If you've not heard of us, we're an economic group dedicated to spreading Prosperity around. We've nothing against a few people getting rich, but we reckon that Virtue and the economy are best served when everyone's getting a piece of the pie. Hence the name. The Rising Tide lifts all boats, right? We thought it was clever.

Anyway. Point us at a place where you reckon there's untapped Prosperity potential and we'll have a look-see and come up with some ideas that might help out – in our small way. Nothing's for free, any ideas we have are going to take some investment. You can look at the way things are going around the Canterspire Circle to see how effective we are.

One thing is, don't point us at anywhere that work's already been done. You've had the actual Civil Service folk visit Sermersuaq lately, and we won't find anything they didn't. Oh, and we like it if things are focused, we're working in a bit of smaller way than the officials. Maybe there's a specific region you want to look into. Or something folk are already doing for free that you reckon could generate some wealth with a bit of support.

If you're not sure about what sort of thing, talk to Heilyn Bronwen's Rest, the Basilisk of the Bourse. He knows me, and he knows what kind of thing we like to do. I'm going to come up to Anvil this summit. I'll probably be there on Saturday, likely around 5 in the afternoon. I hear Lumi's is a good place to grab a drink, so I'll be there at least to start with. We can grab a drink, pitch some ideas, chat economic theory even. Bring friends!

Yours in Virtue,

Gethyn Blood-and-Sweat

To Rutger kess crowbones

I write because you are responsible for a herb garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Randal Krefinar

I write because you are responsible for a herb garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Skog Stenning

I write because you are responsible for a herb garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Enlynn Skjalning

I write because you are responsible for a herb garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Ohd Trollswyrd

I write because you are responsible for a herb garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Leofric Dunnsen

I write because you are responsible for the Garden of the Falling Snow

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Kai Dunning

I write because you are responsible for Dunfrith

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Iona

I write because you are responsible for a herb garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Loung

I write because you are responsible for a herb garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Toland

I write because you are responsible for a herb garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Moog Dunwolf

I write because you are responsible for a herb garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Leohild Fernwyck

I write because you are responsible for a herb garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Alvarg Andersson

I write because you are responsible for a herb garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Edric Flloydson

I write because you are responsible for a herb garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Grimmshaw

I write because you are responsible for a herb garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Brynjolf

I write because you are responsible for a herb garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Astar Lodindottir

I write because you are responsible for the Hearth

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Matilda

I write because you are responsible for a herb garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Svin'ya Lance Blackthorne

I write because you are responsible for Herb Garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Edwin Drum-Heart

I write because you are responsible for Herb Garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Mila Brook

I write because you are responsible for a herb garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Mercy Kannask

I write because you are responsible for Herb Garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Ilmarine

I write because you are responsible for Herb Garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Kaja

I write because you are responsible for a herb garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Erika Stonemoor

I write because you are responsible for Herb Garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Unnr

I write because you are responsible for Herb Garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Dunstan

I write because you are responsible for a herb garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Brynhilde

I write because you are responsible for Herb Garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Fynch

I write because you are responsible for Herb Garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Sigmund

I write because you are responsible for a herb garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Neave Revna Brun

I write because you are responsible for Herb Garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Alda-Mari dunn

I write because you are responsible for Herb Garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Amalia

I write because you are responsible for a herb garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Ryack

I write because you are responsible for Herb Garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Wren

I write because you are responsible for Herb Garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Fjola

I write because you are responsible for a herb garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden

To Andrew Knox

I write because you are responsible for Herb Garden

I'm known as Auden Landen and am of a small number of mages who have recently re-founded the Strengths of the Deeps coven, having gained access to the hall and regio. You may not have heard of them, most of us had not, but it seems they were well known in the time of Empress Giselle and that they were exceedingly well connected with Sorin, The Hungry Wolf.

We are most interested in the testing, withering, howling side of Winter, and in the flourishing that happens when the worst weeds are cut back by Winter's harsh glare. And so we were delighted when we found that the coven had been gifted a boon, that lay unused among their possessions. It would, it seems call upon the Hungry Wolf to act upon Hahnmark. Something like, but not the same as effects of Ruthless Vigilance, Healthy Crop – across the Territory. Not, without cost, of course, but those who value boons of The Empty Throne know that in suffering we discover what we value.

But we are nervous. We would not fall foul of the Synod. We hear the words of Judgment 125 from the Winter solstice and seek out those that would help us show vigilance in relation to this boon.

So – should it be cast is the first question, and who should cast it is the second. Third is should we use the token we found to send a message to the Empty Chamber informing the Tomb King of our intent?

We need you to decide with us. A discussion, and decisions by show of hands perhaps?

We will come to the Tree of Names, around 4 on the Saturday afternoon of the Solstice. We can meet in the open air, or perhaps one of you might know of an awning nearby with room for those who will be gathered. There could be as many as 40, if all the tenders of herbs in Hahnmark come together.

I hope to see you then

Auden