

Challengers!

In the name of the Iron Duke I greet you.

In the Empire right now there are many who have challenged. Some have just set out on their path, some have been working hard for years. Others will soon reach the day when they must present their deeds so far to the Lord of the Crossroads. Some are relishing the Challenges, others are finding that what they must do does not flow as they expected. Even others challenged as part of groups but find themselves alone and may wish to negotiate anew.

I call you all to meet with me. I will go to the Shattered Tower at around nine in the first evening of the Equinox and seek the hospitality that I believe your Archmage would offer a Herald of my standing. If they do not have space for me there, then I will leave word with them as to where I can be found.

For two hours I will be in Anvil, and in those two hours I hope to see as many of you as can greet me and tell me of your progress – and hear of each other's progress too. If you do not find it easy to move around Anvil yourself, send a message and I will come and find you on another day of the Equinox, in a place you name.

Until we meet

Revel
