

Thomas

Your participant has been invited to the next stage of the Trials of the Pallid Charm. They have been invited to The Imperial Trial.

They need you to accompany them. This takes place at 9.30 on the Friday evening of the Solstice in the Open Chamber under the Dark Sky that you have visited before – the entrance is via the Regio of the Unquiet Hounds in Bittershore, Ossium.

Your participant is Novartis Aurelius

If they are not present, you may pursue their boon for them. Please make sure you bring someone to stand as witness. Nivalis, a Urizeni Draughir will be at the Sentinel Gate. Let her know about the change. She will reveal to you the boon they are pursuing so you may judge its worth.

For participants and witnesses all:

You must not wear armour and you must not bring weapons. There will be seats for those who need them.

Do not take this stage of the trials lightly. If you are unsure of the Herald's meaning at any point, ask, and ask again. There is no shame or penalty in this.

The chamber has been prepared with magics from the Silent Kingdom.

Movement is slowed there, once you are in position, you will find you can only move small amounts – enough for your comfort but not to take significant action unless a Herald directs it.

Cut or tear off this strip to have a completely IC document

Bleeding is slowed. Should anyone be injured, their life force will not fade away as it does in the Imperial lands. BUT do not mistake this and think it means there will be no death. That slowness is only there so long as the Heralds will it to be so. There could be a death in the Open Chamber on the path to earning the Tomb King's boon.

There is a stillness there that you may remember. Do not be afraid to punctuate it with speech or exclamation. You cannot hurt it. Only if you notice that many voices are rising at once and shouting so that some are not heard, then it may remind you of the need to listen under the dark sky.

As the winds blow through the silent chamber, I am Anya of Highguard and I wish you well in your Trials.

A Magister

Your participant has been invited to the next stage of the Trials of the Pallid Charm. They have been invited to The Imperial Trial.

They need you to accompany them. This takes place at 9.30 on the Friday evening of the Solstice in the Open Chamber under the Dark Sky that you have visited before – the entrance is via the Regio of the Unquiet Hounds in Bittershore, Ossium.

Your participant is Clarice Novarion

If they are not present, you may pursue their boon for them. Please make sure you bring someone to stand as witness. Nivalis, a Urizeni Draughir will be at the Sentinel Gate. Let her know about the change. She will reveal to you the boon they are pursuing so you may judge its worth.

For participants and witnesses all:

You must not wear armour and you must not bring weapons. There will be seats for those who need them.

Do not take this stage of the trials lightly. If you are unsure of the Herald's meaning at any point, ask, and ask again. There is no shame or penalty in this.

The chamber has been prepared with magics from the Silent Kingdom.

Movement is slowed there, once you are in position, you will find you can only move small amounts – enough for your comfort but not to take significant action unless a Herald directs it.

Cut or tear off this strip to have a completely IC document

Bleeding is slowed. Should anyone be injured, their life force will not fade away as it does in the Imperial lands. BUT do not mistake this and think it means there will be no death. That slowness is only there so long as the Heralds will it to be so. There could be a death in the Open Chamber on the path to earning the Tomb King's boon.

There is a stillness there that you may remember. Do not be afraid to punctuate it with speech or exclamation. You cannot hurt it. Only if you notice that many voices are rising at once and shouting so that some are not heard, then it may remind you of the need to listen under the dark sky.

As the winds blow through the silent chamber, I am Anya of Highguard and I wish you well in your Trials.

Synne

Your participant has been invited to the next stage of the Trials of the Pallid Charm. They have been invited to The Imperial Trial.

They need you to accompany them. This takes place at 9.30 on the Friday evening of the Solstice in the Open Chamber under the Dark Sky that you have visited before – the entrance is via the Regio of the Unquiet Hounds in Bittershore, Ossium.

Your participant is Blayk Stone

If they are not present, you may pursue their boon for them. Please make sure you bring someone to stand as witness. Nivalis, a Urizeni Draughir will be at the Sentinel Gate. Let her know about the change. She will reveal to you the boon they are pursuing so you may judge its worth.

For participants and witnesses all:

You must not wear armour and you must not bring weapons. There will be seats for those who need them.

Do not take this stage of the trials lightly. If you are unsure of the Herald's meaning at any point, ask, and ask again. There is no shame or penalty in this.

The chamber has been prepared with magics from the Silent Kingdom.

Movement is slowed there, once you are in position, you will find you can only move small amounts – enough for your comfort but not to take significant action unless a Herald directs it.

Cut or tear off this strip to have a completely IC document

Bleeding is slowed. Should anyone be injured, their life force will not fade away as it does in the Imperial lands. BUT do not mistake this and think it means there will be no death. That slowness is only there so long as the Heralds will it to be so. There could be a death in the Open Chamber on the path to earning the Tomb King's boon.

There is a stillness there that you may remember. Do not be afraid to punctuate it with speech or exclamation. You cannot hurt it. Only if you notice that many voices are rising at once and shouting so that some are not heard, then it may remind you of the need to listen under the dark sky.

As the winds blow through the silent chamber, I am Anya of Highguard and I wish you well in your Trials.

Selwyn

Your participant has been invited to the next stage of the Trials of the Pallid Charm. They have been invited to The Imperial Trial.

They need you to accompany them. This takes place at 9.30 on the Friday evening of the Solstice in the Open Chamber under the Dark Sky that you have visited before – the entrance is via the Regio of the Unquiet Hounds in Bittershore, Ossium.

Your participant is Terah

If they are not present, you may pursue their boon for them. Please make sure you bring someone to stand as witness. Nivalis, a Urizeni Draughir will be at the Sentinel Gate. Let her know about the change. She will reveal to you the boon they are pursuing so you may judge its worth.

For participants and witnesses all:

You must not wear armour and you must not bring weapons. There will be seats for those who need them.

Do not take this stage of the trials lightly. If you are unsure of the Herald's meaning at any point, ask, and ask again. There is no shame or penalty in this.

The chamber has been prepared with magics from the Silent Kingdom.

Movement is slowed there, once you are in position, you will find you can only move small amounts – enough for your comfort but not to take significant action unless a Herald directs it.

Cut or tear off this strip to have a completely IC document

Bleeding is slowed. Should anyone be injured, their life force will not fade away as it does in the Imperial lands. BUT do not mistake this and think it means there will be no death. That slowness is only there so long as the Heralds will it to be so. There could be a death in the Open Chamber on the path to earning the Tomb King's boon.

There is a stillness there that you may remember. Do not be afraid to punctuate it with speech or exclamation. You cannot hurt it. Only if you notice that many voices are rising at once and shouting so that some are not heard, then it may remind you of the need to listen under the dark sky.

As the winds blow through the silent chamber, I am Anya of Highguard and I wish you well in your Trials.

Gawain Splitroot

Your participant has been invited to the next stage of the Trials of the Pallid Charm. They have been invited to The Imperial Trial.

They need you to accompany them. This takes place at 9.30 on the Friday evening of the Solstice in the Open Chamber under the Dark Sky that you have visited before – the entrance is via the Regio of the Unquiet Hounds in Bittershore, Ossium.

Your participant is Drefa Brackensong

If they are not present, you may pursue their boon for them. Please make sure you bring someone to stand as witness. Nivalis, a Urizeni Draughir will be at the Sentinel Gate. Let her know about the change. She will reveal to you the boon they are pursuing so you may judge its worth.

For participants and witnesses all:

You must not wear armour and you must not bring weapons. There will be seats for those who need them.

Do not take this stage of the trials lightly. If you are unsure of the Herald's meaning at any point, ask, and ask again. There is no shame or penalty in this.

The chamber has been prepared with magics from the Silent Kingdom.

Movement is slowed there, once you are in position, you will find you can only move small amounts – enough for your comfort but not to take significant action unless a Herald directs it.

Cut or tear off this strip to have a completely IC document

Bleeding is slowed. Should anyone be injured, their life force will not fade away as it does in the Imperial lands. BUT do not mistake this and think it means there will be no death. That slowness is only there so long as the Heralds will it to be so. There could be a death in the Open Chamber on the path to earning the Tomb King's boon.

There is a stillness there that you may remember. Do not be afraid to punctuate it with speech or exclamation. You cannot hurt it. Only if you notice that many voices are rising at once and shouting so that some are not heard, then it may remind you of the need to listen under the dark sky.

As the winds blow through the silent chamber, I am Anya of Highguard and I wish you well in your Trials.

Tamar of Enlightenment

Your participant has been invited to the next stage of the Trials of the Pallid Charm. They have been invited to The Imperial Trial.

They need you to accompany them. This takes place at 9.30 on the Friday evening of the Solstice in the Open Chamber under the Dark Sky that you have visited before – the entrance is via the Regio of the Unquiet Hounds in Bittershore, Ossium.

Your participant is Isolde of Hearthfire

If they are not present, you may pursue their boon for them. Please make sure you bring someone to stand as witness. Nivalis, a Urizeni Draughir will be at the Sentinel Gate. Let her know about the change. She will reveal to you the boon they are pursuing so you may judge its worth.

For participants and witnesses all:

You must not wear armour and you must not bring weapons. There will be seats for those who need them.

Do not take this stage of the trials lightly. If you are unsure of the Herald's meaning at any point, ask, and ask again. There is no shame or penalty in this.

The chamber has been prepared with magics from the Silent Kingdom.

Movement is slowed there, once you are in position, you will find you can only move small amounts – enough for your comfort but not to take significant action unless a Herald directs it.

Cut or tear off this strip to have a completely IC document

Bleeding is slowed. Should anyone be injured, their life force will not fade away as it does in the Imperial lands. BUT do not mistake this and think it means there will be no death. That slowness is only there so long as the Heralds will it to be so. There could be a death in the Open Chamber on the path to earning the Tomb King's boon.

There is a stillness there that you may remember. Do not be afraid to punctuate it with speech or exclamation. You cannot hurt it. Only if you notice that many voices are rising at once and shouting so that some are not heard, then it may remind you of the need to listen under the dark sky.

As the winds blow through the silent chamber, I am Anya of Highguard and I wish you well in your Trials.